Decorated Army veteran Corporal Daniel 'Dan' Keighran VC was an honoured guest at this year's Remembrance Day service at the Shrine of Remembrance at ANZAC Square, Brisbane.

WELCOME TO OUR new Board

IT WAS with great pleasure that we introduced members to our new RSL Queensland Board of Directors on 28 October.

Congratulations to Ash Naughton, who was elected to the role of Strategy Development and Execution Director. I also welcome Tony Orchard (Director – Financial Management), Chris Hamilton (Director – Stakeholder Engagement and Advocacy) and Nic Gould (Director – Legal, Governance and Risk Management).

You can read more about our new Directors on page 69.

THANKS TO OUR MEMBERS

This has been a long journey, and I wish to acknowledge the decision of members and their focus and support of this outcome, which has allowed us to continue to maintain our core values and focus on veterans.

The governance structure may have changed, but our priorities have not. Veterans and members continue to be our priority. With a new State Board to work on State Branch and strategic matters, the newly formed State Council of District Presidents is 100% focused on matters of their Districts.

The journey has included acceptance of the new structure at our June AGM, nomination of veteran candidates, an election, and finally now the commencement of the new Board. Along the way, a great deal of work has been done by delegates, members, staff, District Secretaries, Sub Branch volunteers and the District Presidents who formed the previous State Board.

You have shown tremendous commitment throughout this process, and I'd like to express my personal thanks to all of you who have helped along the way.

I also want to offer my heartfelt thanks to the outgoing Board, the District Presidents. They leave the Board having navigated us through the difficulties of the COVID era, refocused us on veterans, developed and agreed upon a new strategy, and successfully governed us to a healthy business position.

WHY WE PAUSE ON REMEMBRANCE DAY

This Remembrance Day,

I was honoured to attend the service at the Shrine of Remembrance in ANZAC Square, Brisbane. We were joined by numerous dignitaries, including Dan Keighran VC, the Governor of Queensland Dr Jeannette Young AC PSM, Queensland Premier Annastacia Palaszczuk MP, and Brisbane Lord Mayor Adrian Schrinner, as well as many veterans and ADF representatives.

Through Remembrance Day services around the state and our Remember to Remember campaign, RSL Queensland helps keep the spirit of those who have suffered or died alive. Each year, we ask all Australians to pause, reflect and honour those who gave their tomorrow for our today.

When we pause, among those we remember are those who died for our country in the Great War. The losses were unimaginably large. No Australian family was left untouched. Around 10 per cent of Australia's adult male population was either killed or wounded.

Yet after all the years, it can be challenging to know how best to honour their sacrifice. In all our towns and cities there are, of course, memorials to them, but there is, I believe, another memorial – an equally important memorial – and it's us and the way we live our lives, a memorial they would wish for.

Great nations are not great because of their material wealth or their size, they're great because of their national character – our character.

I like to think that those who laid down their lives for our future are looking down and saying, “We did not die in vain... our sons and our daughters have made a good thing of the freedom and the land that we kept for them.”

That, I believe, is the best way for us to respect their sacrifice, for us to remember them. That's why Remembrance Day is important.

The secret Society is discovered, raided by teachers and Ashley is interrogated by the Principal. O'Halloran is quickly removed by church authorities to a mountain retreat where he experiences, he believes, a magical epiphany.

Years later, Ashley and Keith and their girlfriends, Samantha and Felicity, all "survivors" and all damaged, navigate life in their twenties as best they can. Greg Bruce is an orthopaedic surgeon who served in the Royal Australian Air Force. Between 1995 and 2008, he was sent overseas on ten military deployments to humanitarian disasters, local conflicts and war zones, including the most attacked US base in Iraq.

The restricted medical resources, dangers and harsh living conditions made military surgery very different from civilian practice.

There were good experiences and horrible experiences and readjustment and reflection on return home. Are you ever the same again?

Greg Bruce was made a Member of the Order of Australia in recognition of his military service in 2007.

Rosie Franklin is an enthusiastic teacher and sports coach who, through her desire for adventure, cements a teenage school friendship into a loving relationship with Chas Anderson. Chas, a local, daredevil stunt pilot, is also a well-known crop-duster.

Together they weave their dreams for the future, unaware of the betrayal by friends and associates to undermine their aspirations.

From the days of settlement during the early 1900s in the mid-western New South Wales farming region, to the 1980s, there is generational discord, inheritance arguments, and jealousy, all of which ultimately create dissension between the characters, while adventurous pursuits continue in the isolated, NSW, country town of Gunnedah.

From the age of two, Georgina experienced the vilest abuse and cruelty, unimaginable for the average person. It seemed that everywhere she turned, every man who came into her life had just one purpose in mind. How could a two, four or even a six-year-old understand why grown men would want to touch her body? Georgina had no concept of decency and no role models to help shape her future. With a mother who ignored her pleas for help, Georgina and her siblings had nowhere to turn.

Despite a mother who suffered a long history of abuse, uncles cursed with evil, a gangster for a father and later a stepfather whose sins outtrumped all others, Georgina survived her battles, overcame the generational curse, and lives to tell this story.

HELPING VETERANS AND THEIR families thrive

IT'S BEEN a productive year, 2022 – one where we at RSL Queensland, and across our League, have provided care, commemoration and camaraderie to veterans and their families. In doing so, we have created an environment where veterans and their families can – and have been – supported by us all.

This success has been down to our combined efforts, and in particular those volunteers across the state who make that connection with veterans and their families every day.

OUR 2030 STRATEGY

As we look towards 2030, it's important that our strategy reflects who we are and how we can provide for the needs of veterans – not just to the veterans and their families, but also to the broader community.

We've brought that together under three key goals: care, commemoration and camaraderie. These are the guiding lights that we'll be using to develop who we are as RSL Queensland and how we can help the League deliver those goals to veterans and their families.

Our outgoing Board has been very instructive and highly engaged, ensuring we bring together the broader League and that RSL Queensland is positioned as an enabling organisation to:

- facilitate care for veterans and their families
- recognise and commemorate veterans in the community, and
- provide environments whereby camaraderie can

“Over the past few years, we have increased our services – including advocacy, wellbeing, employment, and homelessness. We have also been working with other organisations to help create an environment where care can be delivered to veterans and their families wherever they may be.”

flourish for veterans and their families as they're in service, transition through service, and for the remainder of their lives.

THE FUTURE OF VETERAN SERVICES

Recognising that one of our key goals is care, RSL Queensland has been working to facilitate the Veteran Services plan. This will define where we're going to invest our care model moving forward.

Over the past few years, we have increased our services – including advocacy, wellbeing, employment, and homelessness. We have also been working with other organisations to help create an environment where care can be delivered to veterans and their families wherever they may be.

I look forward to continuing to update members on where those initiatives are and how we're going to connect across the broader League on delivering those initiatives. Although there are so many Sub Branches working collaboratively with us in supporting veterans, we still hear that many Sub Branch volunteers are not aware of the services available.

A good starting point is our website, which lists all of RSL Queensland's services. Our teams have been widely promoting rslqld.org at District meetings and the AGM to ensure delegates are aware of what's available. We also have RSL Queensland staff located across the state, so please reach out to them if you have questions.

REFLECTING ON REMEMBRANCE DAY

On Remembrance Day, I was at ANZAC Square in Brisbane to pay my respects to those that have gone before us. Like all of us, I enjoyed being able to wear a poppy and take the time to reflect on those who paid the ultimate sacrifice and those that have suffered in an ongoing way for our freedoms.

We were honoured to have Dan Keighran VC helping us promote this year's Remember to Remember campaign, and I'd like to thank him for his support. He's a very busy man, but he's a man who keeps giving to the community the same way that he did in service.

A GIFT OF CHRISTMAS SPIRIT

The annual Christmas Spirit Hamper drive has now become a tradition at RSL Queensland. This year we packed about 600 hampers, due to arrive at District offices and into the Sub Branch community in early December.

These hampers are designed for those who may need some additional support over Christmas, but also to recognise the contribution of those who have done exceptional work in our community.

These hampers are important. They connect people who may be feeling socially isolated over the Christmas period and remind them that there's an organisation full of good people across Queensland who care about their wellbeing.

I'd like to thank all of you for providing support to our mates across Queensland. I wish you all a safe and happy Christmas season, and I look forward to engaging with you again in 2023.

BEAUTIFUL COMMUNITY SUPPORT

Bunnings has again exceeded its care for our community, providing much needed support for Goodna RSL Sub Branch and the Women's Auxiliary after recent floods. The Bundamba store manager contacted us through the Women's Auxiliary to provide any necessary goods, including boxes, cleaning products and wrapping paper, to store memorabilia and artifacts that survived the flood damage.

They continue to assist our fundraising efforts by allowing us to hold sausage sizzles and craft stalls. This money has enabled us to continue supporting the local veteran community, particularly after the floods.

Bundamba staff also repaired and cleaned up in time for ANZAC Day 2022. Until we can get back to our own facilities, the Bundamba store has provided us with the use of their own meeting rooms for our executive committee meetings. It is a pleasure to work alongside such community-minded people and their organisation.

CLARIFICATION ABOUT THE NMBVAA

In Queensland RSL News – Edition 3, 2022 and the 26 October Member Update, we published details on the disbandment of the National Malaya & Borneo Veterans Association Australia (NMBVAA) Qld Inc.

We wish to clarify that the NMBVAA Qld Inc. – which became a state incorporation in 2009 – has disbanded, though its Brisbane Branch and Sunshine Coast Branch members will continue meeting socially. The National Malaya & Borneo Veterans Association Australia (NMBVAA) Inc. – which was incorporated in 1995 – remains very much active.

In Brisbane, the Queensland and Brisbane Branch of NMBVAA Inc. meets at 11:00am on the fourth Tuesday of each month at Wynnum RSL Sub Branch, and new members (including the wives and widows of those who served) are welcome. For more information, please visit nmbvaa.org.au.

We apologise for any confusion.

CAPTION CORRECTION

WWII VETERAN PROJECTS

I am a 95-year-old WWII veteran and a member of Kawana Waters RSL Sub Branch, and I'd like to let other members know about two of my projects. One is to get remaining WWII veterans to write their memoirs – before it's too late. Within five years, most of us – if not all of us – will be gone. If you require assistance to write your memoir, please contact me on 0417 958 257. I have already done this with several of our members.

The second project is to get our seven WWII Sub Branch members, together with their partners or next of kin, to meet for morning tea. This idea was such a success that our president at the time offered for our Sub Branch to sponsor us and we've now been meeting every month for the past five years. Unfortunately, we are down to four veterans as three have since passed away. Their wives and supporters still come along each month, with 11 joining us in September. We are known as The Mouldy Oldies.

I would like to encourage all Sub Branches across Australia to start something similar. I'm sure some members in their 90s get bored and would enjoy the company of like-minded veterans for a chat.

THE PREMIER'S ANZAC PRIZE

THE 2023 Premier's Anzac Prize is proudly presented in partnership with RSL Queensland. The 2023 recipients have now been announced and we congratulate the successful students of the 2023 Premier's Anzac Prize.

We are proud to support this initiative, as it provides eight Queensland high school students the opportunity to engage with the ANZAC tradition first-hand and explore how the ANZAC legacy relates to modern Australian life.

RSL Queensland has signed a three-year corporate partnership (2023-2025) with the Department of Education and is a platinum sponsor of the initiative.

The Premier's Anzac Prize is a highly enriching program for young history enthusiasts. Prize recipients are required to take part in activities that build their knowledge and understanding of the ANZAC spirit and its relevance in modern Australian and global contexts.

Tasks include research and commemoration of service people, community engagement and fundraising projects, and participation in a two-week tour of Europe visiting key sites important to Australian war history. Students will be involved in learning about life at the Front and the history of our ANZACs overseas during WWI.

Is hip or knee pain holding you back?

Radiofrequency Ablation may help get you back to doing what you love.

If you're suffering from ongoing hip or knee pain, Radiofrequency Ablation (RFA) is a non-surgical, safe and effective procedure with minimal treatment and recovery time. RFA is especially beneficial to those seeking an alternative to surgery. The procedure is completed in approximately 20 minutes and unlike surgery RFA involves no incision. Current studies are demonstrating up to 12 months pain relief and functional improvement specifically for knee pain and osteoarthritis.

REMEMBRANCE DAY: WHY WE REMEMBER ON 11 NOVEMBER

The 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month is a moment not only to pause and remember all those who have served and sacrificed in wars and conflicts across the world, but also to reflect on the historical events that led to this day of significance.

Shrine of Remembrance,
ANZAC Square,
Brisbane.

originally announced to mark the anniversary of the Armistice that ended fighting with Germany in World War I, Remembrance

Day today gives us all the opportunity to acknowledge the service personnel who died while serving in wars, conflicts, and peacekeeping operations.

SIGNATURES THAT ENDED FOUR YEARS OF CONFLICT

At 5am on 11 November 1918 in a railway carriage in France, representatives of France, Britain and Germany all signed a document that would put an end to four years of conflict. Six hours later – at 11am – those signatures would bring into effect the Armistice that ended World War I.

Across the world, people rejoiced and celebrated the news, including in Australia. Despite the late hour of the day in Australia, school, fire station, and church bells around the country rang, waking hundreds of people to share the news that war was over.

Alongside the excitement, there was also a notable sense of loss and grief. More than 60,000 Australian soldiers had made the ultimate sacrifice, more than 150,000 had been wounded or taken prisoner and some 23,000 soldiers were missing. Very few families did not have some link to the war effort.

It would take another six months of negotiations before the Treaty of Versailles was signed in June 1919 and for exhausted troops to return home to their loved ones. For many, while they returned home, they never truly left the horror of the battlefields behind.

A MOMENT OF SILENCE SPARKS TRADITION

On the first anniversary of the Armistice (11 November was known as Armistice Day until after World War II) King George V asked all the people of the British Empire to observe two minutes' silence at 11am.

It is a tradition still honoured today during Remembrance Day services as we remember all who have served in the Australian Defence Force, in World War I and in all wars, conflicts, and peacekeeping operations since.

The tradition was formalised in Australia in 1997 by Governor-General Sir William Deane, who issued a proclamation declaring 11 November to be Remembrance Day and urging all Australians to observe one minute of silence at 11am on 11 November each year.

Today, we encourage all Australians to attend a service and honour those who have served. If you can't make it to a service, it's easy to set a reminder on your calendar, switch your phone to 'do not disturb' and pause for one minute to remember. It's a simple action that means so much.

OTHER REMEMBRANCE DAY TRADITIONS

While it may be the best-known Remembrance Day tradition, the minute's silence is not the only custom carried out on 11 November.

The red poppy is equally as significant to Remembrance Day. Known as the 'Flower of Remembrance', the red poppies were among the first to flower in the battlefields of northern France and Belgium after the conflict ended. The vivid red bloom was adopted in England in 1919 as an emblem to honour the dead and help the living, and Australia followed suit in 1921.

Today, poppies are worn on Remembrance Day – on the left lapel – in memory of those who served and made the ultimate sacrifice, and to recognise their acts of gallantry.

Other traditions commonly seen on 11 November include wearing a sprig of rosemary as a sign of remembrance and loyalty, and flying flags at half-mast from 10:30-11:03am.

Courage UNDER FIRE

Decorated Army veteran Corporal Daniel ‘Dan’ Keighran VC was an honoured guest at this year’s Remembrance Day service at the Shrine of Remembrance at ANZAC Square, Brisbane. During the commemoration, Dan paused to reflect on all who have worn a uniform and the sacrifices they’ve made.

 Lani Pauli

IN 2012, Corporal Daniel ‘Dan’ Keighran was awarded the Victoria Cross for Australia – the highest award in the Australian honours system – for his actions in the Battle of Derapet in Afghanistan in 2010.

He was only the third soldier, and the first member of the Royal Australian Regiment (RAR), to receive the Victoria Cross for Australia since the award’s introduction in 1991*.

Dan joined the Army at 17 years of age in 2000 and served in East Timor and Iraq. He later deployed to Afghanistan in 2007 with the Special Operations Task Group as a Bushmaster Protected Mobility Vehicle driver, and then again in 2010 with the 6RAR Battle Group as part of Mentoring Task Force One.

Dan was deployed on multiple operations, clocking up nearly 12 years’ full-time service. He says his first few deployments were working with foreign governments, and it was a deployment to East Timor with the United Nations operation that started to shape him as a soldier.

“It was my first operation as a young soldier going forward,” he says. “I learned so much about myself as a leader and operations. For the first time I was out there doing the job of an infantry soldier – a combat soldier on the ground.”

“Then Iraq was my first time in what you could consider a real war zone, where all of a sudden you are dealing with explosive devices and an enemy force.”

AN ORDINARY DAY

It was a day during his deployment to Afghanistan that perhaps defined his career as a soldier – a day that Dan recalls being “the fight of his life.”

Today it's known as the Battle of Derapet, and it's where Dan's courage during enemy fire was acknowledged with the Victoria Cross for Australia. His actions during the battle were paramount in allowing the Coalition forces to withdraw without further casualties.

“I remember walking into the village of Derapet and as I walk around this building I remember looking up and seeing an enemy pulling the trigger on a PKM machine gun and a burst of fire comes back at me. It is a sound I will always remember – the sound of a bullet as it travels past your head.

“It was a three-and-a-half-hour firefight, and it was at the point when we were pretty much outnumbered, with about 40 people strong on the ground and facing well over 100 Taliban fighters.”

By this point in the conflict, one of his comrades had been wounded with a bullet in his shoulder. Unfortunately, the soldier passed away from the injury.

Dan says knowing they lost a soldier in combat is probably the hardest thing he's had to deal with.

“The way I saw it, I had no other courses of action available, so I drew fire onto myself to enable the others to work on the casualty and potentially identify targets to help in targeting enemy fire as I drew fire away from the guys treating him.

“I don't think what I did was really brave; it was what was required at the time. It was a decision based on weighing up risks and knowing a helicopter was coming to get my mate, I had medics in my team who could look after me if something happened, and I was wearing ballistic plates.”

REMEMBRANCE DAY

As for what service means to Dan in light of Remembrance Day, he says it's so much more than continuing family traditions.

“It's about giving back to those that aren't able. Service for me was always about signing up for something greater than myself,” he says.

“As someone who has seen war and the horror of it, who has lost mates in combat, I absolutely understand the importance of recognising that service and making sure every Australian is aware of what happens when someone puts on that uniform. ←

KEEPING the spirit OF SERVICE ALIVE

For Sunnybank RSL Sub Branch member Ibraheem Malik, Remembrance Day signifies a day to reflect on the people and communities impacted by conflict.

 Lani Pauli

MOVING to Australia from Pakistan in early 2000, Ibraheem's father was a soldier of the Crown, who served with distinction on the front line of WWII.

"My dad was a member of the Royal Indian Engineers and served during the Second World War in the Burma campaign," he shares.

"I was just 28 years old when my father passed away in 1998. Remembrance Day has become special for me because it isn't a day about glorifying war; it is about the people who have paid the ultimate sacrifice. People who have gone through something unexplainable."

EXPERIENCES SHARED THROUGH THE WRITTEN WORD

His father's time in service was not something ever shared with Ibraheem until the night before he passed away.

"He gave me some very old papers and files. At the time I didn't open them; I just kept them in a safe place. I brought them with me to Australia and it wasn't until early 2014 that I looked at them and started to understand the experience my father had during his time serving.

"It was in reading his service booklet and finding out that he served with honour and was awarded the 1939-45 Star and Burma Star for his distinguished service that I got to know my father."

CONTINUING THE TRADITION OF SERVING COMMUNITY

Ibraheem joined Sunnybank RSL Sub Branch in 2015 and since then, much like his father, has dedicated his time to serving his community. In addition to his work with the Sub Branch he is a volunteer for the Queensland State Emergency Services.

"Since joining I've spent a lot of time advocating in my community to the younger people about what ANZAC Day and Remembrance Day are about and volunteering for the ANZAC Day Appeal and Remembrance Poppy Appeal, attending the services, marching in the parade,” he explains.

“Sunnybank is a very special Sub Branch. It's very inclusive.”

Ibraheem is currently working on a project called Muslims for Remembrance.

“It is a project close to my heart. It is basically uncovering the untold stories of Muslim ANZACs and their dedication and their loyalty to the country they were living in. Initially, my exhibition was a part of Remembrance Day in 2018, and since then we have made it a part of every ANZAC Day and Remembrance Day here at Sunnybank Sub Branch.”

A DAY FOR FAMILY

Remembrance Day for Ibraheem is a day to reflect and spend time with his family.

“My son and I lay a wreath every Remembrance Day. I've been fortunate to learn more about my father's service through the Royal Indian Historical Society in England and a day like Remembrance Day is a moment for me to pause and remember his sacrifices.

“I remember one piece of advice my father gave me. He said, 'Son, always remember, wherever you live you should be known as a beneficial human being for your fellow beings.'” ←

IN LOVE and war

War widow Jenny Gregory says Remembrance Day is a chance to “actually stop and think” about the sacrifice that their loved ones, and all service people, have made.

 Belinda Crossman

ABOVE: War widow Jenny Gregory at the ANZAC Square and Memorial Galleries, where visitors can leave messages of remembrance on post-it notes in honour of those who have served and sacrificed.

WHENEVER her husband, Winston Gregory, departed for duty, Jenny knew that he might not return. It was one of many sacrifices she – like all Defence partners – made for many of the eight years Winston served in the Australian Army.

“When you’re married to a person in military service, we are kind of collateral damage as well,” Jenny says. “We are the ones who virtually say, well, okay, you can go to war.

“Not only are they prepared to give up their lives for their country, but we are prepared for them to do that as well, which I think is huge.”

LIVING AS A SOLDIER’S WIFE

Originally a police officer, Winston was 20 when he was called up to national service. And it was during his first deployment to Malaysia, in 1966, that he first got to know Jenny. Winston later enlisted as a regular soldier, serving in Vietnam, Australia, and Singapore.

“The hardest time for me was his time in Vietnam,” Jenny says. “Now there’s mobile phones, internet, etc., but we had to wait for letters in those days, so it was a long time. I had two small children and the biggest thing, I think, was loneliness. You’ve got no one to talk to.”

But loneliness wasn’t Jenny’s only problem at the time, as she later discovered.

“My hope is they appreciate and honour those who have been prepared to serve, and all those who died for their country – all over the world, not just Australians – and remember that we have our freedom because they served.”

like Christmas when the sense of loss hits hardest.

A TIME TO REMEMBER

Although Jenny thinks of Winston all the time, Remembrance Day is a chance for war widows like her to “actually stop and think” about the sacrifice that their loved ones, and all service people, have made. And she hopes that others around Australia will do the same.

“My hope is they appreciate and honour those who have been prepared to serve, and all those who died for their country – all over the world, not just Australians – and remember that we have our freedom because they served.”

“Singapore was a very interesting experience because Winston was seconded to the US Narcotics Bureau and worked in narcotics control. I didn’t know half of what he was doing. He was working undercover and if I was to see him out and about in Singapore, I wasn’t to recognise him or say hello.

“He told me many years later that the family was actually in danger while he was doing all of that, and apologised. He got a lot of commendations for that service, so I’m very proud of his service.

“He was a good husband, a wonderful father. I loved him.”

WOMEN LOOKING AFTER WOMEN

After Winston’s passing in 2013, Jenny found herself “at a bit at a loss”. She joined her local War Widows group, quickly rising to their executive before becoming State President in 2016.

Founded in 1947, Australian War Widows Queensland (AWWQ) supports widows, carers and families affected by Defence service, offering everything from social connection to referral services, affordable accommodation, and member advocacy. AWWQ has 27 Sub Branches and social groups, all of which Jenny tries to visit yearly.

“The main thing I’ve tried to do is get the name of War Widows out there – show what we can do, that we are women looking after women.

“When you become a war widow, it is quite isolating. The biggest problem for the war widows is that they don’t want to go out on their own. Our groups keep them together. It’s about being with other ladies who’ve been through the same thing.”

This company and understanding make all the difference, Jenny says, particularly on special occasions

The power OF A HUG

On a rough day, a comforting hug from a loved one can be a gentle reminder you're not alone and bring you a sense of peace.

 Lani Pauli

YOU can imagine how many times a simple hug brought Warwick couple Bruce and Belinda McGowan closer during their 17 years together. So, when Bruce was faced with the impossible task of saying goodbye to Belinda in May 2021, you can also imagine the power of them being able to hug each other one last time as they faced one of life's hardest moments.

ABOVE:
Bruce McGowan shares special memories of his life with his wife, Belinda, with a friend.

A LEGACY OF A LIFE OF SERVICE

Flight Lieutenant Belinda McGowan served in the Royal Australian Air Force (RAAF) for almost 33 years.

"She was very dedicated to her time in service," Bruce shares. "She joined the RAAF in 1988, starting as a comms operative, before facilitating and teaching leadership and management to junior ranks.

"Growing up on a farm, joining the Air Force allowed her to grow and give back. Her kindness was probably her biggest core value."

GOODBYES MADE KINDER

Bruce was able to hold and hug Belinda as she passed away from cancer, thanks to a palliative care cuddle bed. A cuddle bed allows family members and loved ones to lie together as the loved one passes or receives treatment.

The Cuddle Bed Program was something Bruce and Belinda started planning before she passed, and Bruce carries on the work as part of Belinda's legacy.

"We had seen the cuddle beds in city hospitals, but in regional areas the most common solution was to push two single beds together. Belinda and I felt strongly that regional hospitals deserved the opportunity to have cuddle beds and that is what inspired The Cuddle Bed Program," Bruce says.

"It's my goal that every regional hospital in Australia has the opportunity to have at least one cuddle bed to support their palliative care patients."

While the experience it offers families is invaluable, each bed is an investment of $22,000. To date, Bruce has been able to fundraise and secure three cuddle beds for regional hospitals, including Warwick Hospital, where Belinda passed away in 2021.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

Bruce says that 11 November has always been about the people.

“For me, Remembrance Day has always been to remember the people. Not only those who lost their lives but the people who are connected to serving members of Defence.

“All serving members have mothers, fathers, brothers and sisters, or children. That’s what Remembrance Day means to me. Remembering the community and the people within it.”

HONOURING OUR VETERANS

Warwick RSL Sub Branch President John Skinner says the Sub Branch was pleased to support Bruce and also donated a bed to the program.

ABOVE: Thanks to a palliative care cuddle bed, Bruce was able to hold Belinda as she passed away from cancer in May 2021. “It’s my goal that every regional hospital in Australia has the opportunity to have at least one cuddle bed to support their palliative care patients,” says Bruce.

“Belinda was one of our main flag bearers and spoke at a couple of different services. She was such a likeable lass. Very friendly, easy to talk to, and she made friends wherever she went,” John recalls.

John says Remembrance Day is part of Australia’s heritage and an opportunity to honour those people who hold a special place in our hearts. A Vietnam veteran himself, John remembers six close friends he lost during the war.

“We were at Dak Do, where a land mine went off that killed three and wounded 23. Two of those people were in front of me and their bodies took the blast that saved my life. They were some of my very good friends, and that touched me quite deeply at the time.

“Remembrance Day used to be a time when all Australians stopped. Now it doesn’t seem to be quite like that, but I believe we’re bringing it back.”

TEACHES KIDS REMEMBRANCE THROUGH ART

More than 3,500 Queensland kids marked this year's Remembrance Day in a creative new way, tapping into their inner artist.

EQUIPPED with coloured chalk and history lessons from RSL Sub Branch volunteers, children took to school pavements across the state, sketching vibrant, heart-warming murals paying tribute to our service people.

It was all done as part of Draw to Remember – a pilot initiative launched by RSL Queensland, designed to teach primary school children the significance of Remembrance Day and encourage remembrance through art.

The activity connected veterans with students from 55 participating primary schools across Queensland, each nominated by a local Sub Branch.

RSL Queensland Commemorations Manager Terri Morris – who conceived and projected the initiative to reality – describes the pilot as “a huge success”.

“It gave children the freedom to explore their creative strengths in a no-rules activity, where they could draw what Remembrance Day means to them. It’s inspiring to see that children as young as five years old already have so much rich knowledge into the origins of the day.”

“Bringing our network together with schools allowed children to admire and connect with a real local veteran and hear stories of their time serving,” Terri says.

“It gave children the freedom to explore their creative strengths in a no-rules activity, where they could draw what Remembrance Day means to them. It’s inspiring to see that children as young as five years old already have so much rich knowledge into the origins of the day.”

The feedback from schools has been “really positive”, and the children’s drawings have shown impressive flair and insight.

Colourful and unique, they feature soldiers and sailors, jets and military dogs, sunsets and slouch hats, rainbows of poppies, and those immortal words – ‘lest we forget’.

“The quality of the drawings that came back from the schools was inspiring. It’s truly heart-warming to see children of all ages putting their all into their drawings,” Terri says.

“I have thoroughly enjoyed trying to interpret their stories of remembrance through art. It was refreshing to see a variety of drawings, from Indigenous and international flags through to animals and great-grandparents who served and live on in the memories passed down through their families.”

Keeping those memories alive is what makes activities like Draw to Remember so important, Terri says.

“It’s a unique way that we can engage children in commemoration to keep alive the spirit and memories of those who have sacrificed.

“We couldn’t have done it without the support of the RSL Sub Branches and members.”

Following the pilot’s success, RSL Queensland hopes to share Draw to Remember with more schools next year. ←

The pint-sized Rollingsstone RSL Sub Branch is a shining example of how friendships and community were forged out of one Sub Branch in Queensland's tropical north.

THE TROPICA

It's a scorching hot afternoon on the palm-fringed dunes of Townsville's Balgal Beach, but Rollingstone RSL Sub Branch President Ewan Cameron is barely raising a sweat.

Everything from the heat to the postcard-perfect views is business as usual for the passionate local veteran.

When asked how he feels about running the small but mighty nearby Sub Branch to a backdrop this breathtaking, he shrugs and laughs.

"It's paradise one day, and perfect the next."

"In fact," he admits, while gesturing at the golden sand that quickly becomes the sapphire sea, "I don't even notice it anymore."

This is partly because the former RSL Queensland Vice President spends his time in a pristine beachside pocket just a 40-minute drive north of Townsville, where any given day it looks as though the landscape has been digitally enhanced.

But it's mostly because Ewan continues to dedicate endless hours to bettering the lives of local veterans and the wider community from inside and out of the humble Rollingstone Sub Branch – where diversity, inclusion and care are at the very core of their manifest.

BIRTH OF ROLLINGSTONE RSL SUB BRANCH

Nestled between Ingham and Townsville, and perched at the start of the 'great green way' that stretches all the way to Cairns, Rollingstone comprises a sleepy village with a school, post office, and a police station.

Boasting a population of just 125 in the village and 1,550 in the district – and sandwiched between impossibly green peaks that frame the coastline – Rollingstone is also just a stone's throw from the picturesque beach hamlets of Mystic Sands and Balgal Beach. There, laid-back holiday homes are dotted among rustic fishing shacks and family abodes that are all but a meander from the shore.

It's also where Ewan and a handful of others decided to co-launch the Rollingstone RSL Sub Branch back in 2000, following his 25 years of service in the Army.

"When we were looking at finding a home for the RSL (Sub Branch), we approached one of the owners of the Mystic Sands Golf Club, who said he had been a Fleet Air Arm Pilot – he'd flown A-4 Skyhawks. He told us that if we didn't have the RSL at his place, he wouldn't talk to us," Ewan says.

"So, now it's the home of Rollingstone RSL Sub Branch and the owner has even put that on his bus.

"But our home is not so much about the bus or the golf club or the wonderful surrounds we have. It's instead the place where you can hang your hat and the kind of place where you know that you can achieve what you want. Our home is our castle."

Back then, when the Sub Branch was in its infancy, Ewan says their unofficial status as 'the new kids on the block' paved the way for new ideas and opportunities that allowed them to craft innovative ideas to better engage not just their members, but the wider community.

"I think the most interesting thing we've been able to do over the course of the Sub Branch is launch our community engagement activities," Ewan says.

"While we always had a good social contingent, we principally started off around the families, and then there were the friends of the members, and so ended up expanding to include a good social group.

"We took the opportunity to form a Citizens' Auxiliary out of that group of social members and I think that was what widened our membership base. That was then seen by the community, and they quickly realised they could join the RSL Queensland Sub Branch without having served."

BIG IMPACT BY SMALL BUT MIGHTY SUB BRANCH

Since those remarkable beginnings, Ewan says the Sub Branch has gone from strength to strength. And while membership has ebbed and flowed over the years – with COVID-19 causing a drop in numbers – the Rollingstone cohort has remained a shining example of the power of community.

"I think the main reason we've been able to do things [well up here] is because we've got a community where people suggest things," Ewan says.

"I also think it's the unique nature of the community. Rollingstone is halfway between Townsville and Ingham ... and generally, there are a number of community organisations, clubs and other charities around here, with most locals tending to be in more than one.

"So, the clubs and the communities and associations tend to work together, because they've sometimes got the same committees and they can easily cooperate. And it just seems to be that RSL Queensland has a range of property that we can all use. It's a bit of give and take all around."

Ewan says this give and take has allowed the Sub Branch to launch powerful community engagement programs over the years to raise participation in suicide awareness and support mental health.

They've also raised the profile of military services and support throughout the region, with a striking memorial erected at Balgal Beach in 2004. This memorial has since become a coveted location to witness the Dawn Service on ANZAC Day.

"Other members come from diverse backgrounds and they're able to bring some fantastic ideas to our Sub Branch. For example, we've currently got a group who are making purple wreaths to commemorate the service of animals in war," Ewan says.

"I think the fellowship side of the Sub Branch is important, and people like to demonstrate that in different ways. That might come out of a Friday afternoon raffle, where one of our members meets a traveller from an RSL in New South Wales or South Australia, and suddenly we've got communication happening across state borders.

"And that's just the benefit of having these travellers turn up and say 'g'day.'"

FUTURE OF ROLLINGSTONE RSL SUB BRANCH

While COVID-19 sparked a decline in membership, Ewan says their pint-sized Sub Branch has already hit the ground running in a post-pandemic world, with the launch of new programs, increased community activity and, as a result, several new memberships.

"We're kind of back to where we were pre-COVID, but in a refreshed way," Ewan says.

"At the moment we've got 43 RSL Queensland League members, and 32 auxiliary members.

"I think the community's aware of what each of us does and I think it keeps our community out here going."

And as to why he does what he does and why their work matters, Ewan says this: "While I was serving, I had soldiers looking after me. It's now my turn to look after them." ←

A STATUE TO HONOUR CALOUNDRA'S WARTIME HISTORY

Caloundra's role in WWII has been cast in bronze at the Kings Beach Amphitheatre, with Caloundra RSL Sub Branch unveiling a memorial on 13 August in honour of those who served.

BOTTOM: The statue is modelled off 104-year-old Sunshine Coast veteran Faye Clarke, centre, and her husband Jack Clarke.

MOST visitors to this Sunshine Coast town wouldn't know the role Caloundra played during WWII.

During the war, from 1939 to 1945, many homes were commandeered by the Armed Forces, with the Caloundra School in Queen Street becoming the headquarters for the American Army. The town was also considered a restricted area by the Australian Defence Force.

Likewise, its proximity to the shipping channel made it the perfect place for an observation area for shipping movements.

A HISTORY TO BE RECOGNISED

It is said that 30 Army units formed up at Kings Beach to farewell Australia before joining the war efforts overseas.

It is these troops that Caloundra RSL Sub Branch President Heather Christie and Welfare Officer Gary Phillips wanted to honour in a bronze statue unveiled at Kings Beach on 13 August.

"This beach represents the last memories of home for the young men and women in the photos we have of this time before they went off to war," Gary says.

The bronze statue is of a soldier, nurse and wounded

“The nurse who the statue was modelled on, Faye Clarke, is now 104 years old and was with us at the unveiling on 13 August, Victory in the Pacific Day.”

soldier on a single plinth. And the decision to place the statue at the Amphitheatre reflects back to the site being the parade ground for 24,000 to 30,000 troops who trained in the area during WWII.

“The nurse who the statue was modelled on, Faye Clarke, is now 104 years old and was with us at the unveiling on 13 August, Victory in the Pacific Day.

“This is our heritage, and it is imperative we are reminded of the bravery and sacrifice these men and women gave and those who continue to serve in the defence of Australia.”

The project has been more than three years in the making, with it finally coming to life thanks to the generous donation of a local philanthropist.

“The statue would be around $300,000 to create the piece, and we made every effort to fundraise the amount or apply for grants. We were very fortunate to have local philanthropists Roy and Nola Thompson step forward and commit the amount needed to build it,” Caloundra RSL Sub Branch President Heather Christie says.

A STATUE BROUGHT TO LIFE

With funding secured, the Sub Branch chose local artists Mark Snell and Jane Bailey of Larvaworx Art Studio in Coolumb.

The local community gathered to unveil the memorial at Kings Beach on the original parade ground, with a military presence and band.

“It was a great afternoon and evening, with the Queensland Air Museum and War Birds Airforce Model Aeroplane Club providing military displays and the Kawana State College drama group providing and setting the theme, with more than 90 young people portraying the VICTORY,” Gary says. ←

A message from Emma.

As we begin to wind down from the year we've had, here is our final issue of the Mates4Mates magazine for 2022.

This time of the year is a great opportunity to reflect on the wide range of wonderful recovery pathways the team have provided for the veteran community and their families across Australia and online. You can read more about these activities, programs and good news stories on page 4 as we share a snapshot of 2022.

One of these programs has been our new Four-Day Wellness Program which was run in South East Queensland, North Queensland, Tasmania, Northern Territory, and New South Wales throughout the year. You can find out more about this program on page 3 and how it's helping veterans manage post-service challenges now and in the future.

Support looks different for everyone, and our Online Family Recovery Centre has been there to ensure no veteran or family member goes through recovery alone. Our online activities and programs have increased exponentially throughout 2022 and we provide a behind-the-scenes look on page 6 at how it all comes together on the screen.

While the holiday season can be a joyous occasion, it can also be a challenging time for others, particularly those in the Defence Force community who have been impacted by service. The Mates4Mates team are here to provide support both in our centres and online, and our clinical team have listed some tips for mentally preparing for the holiday season on page 7.

As you read through these stories, I'd like to wish you and your family a safe and happy holiday season and I look forward to seeing you all in the new year.

A new way to help veterans recover.

"Through self-reflection, exploration, and education, we have seen veterans break through limiting barriers and engage in more fulfilling activities and relationships. Many participants have expressed their gratitude for the program which has propelled their life forward. For some, it has been described as a life changing experience in the most positive way."

— Stacey, Counsellor

After the success of the Three-Day Wellness Programs in 2021, Mates4Mates expanded on its wellness offerings to veterans impacted by service by introducing the Four-Day Wellness Program in 2022.

The Four-Day Wellness Programs have been designed to help veterans find new ways to better manage post-service challenges that they may be facing in their recovery, in a non-judgemental and inclusive environment.

Each program allows veterans to participate in interactive group workshops that can help them to develop healthy coping mechanisms that will support them in managing their mental and physical health now and into the future.

The program is run by a friendly team of Mates4Mates psychologists, counsellors, social workers and exercise physiologists dedicated to helping veterans get the most out of the four days.

Across 12 locations this year, from Fraser Island and the Blue Mountains to Cradle Mountain and Kakadu National Park, veterans took the time over the four days to invest in themselves and their recovery alongside other veterans.

This program is open to all veterans who are registered with Mates4Mates. Be sure to keep an eye out on our website mates4mates.org for opportunities next year. Please note places are limited.

A snapshot of 2022.

Across our centres and online, the Mates4Mates team provided a wide range of new programs and activities throughout 2022. Here is a snippet of those highlights, all with the aim to help support veterans and their families impacted by service.

January

New online programs

A variety of new online activities were delivered to veterans and their families this year, but none as popular as the 'Imagine This!' weekly activity. With a different theme each week, participants respond in their own, unique way through different mediums such as poetry, nail art, crosswords – the list goes on!

February

First Four-Day Wellness Program

O'Reilly's Rainforest Retreat was the first location for our new Four-Day Wellness Program which saw seven veterans find new ways to better manage post-service challenges in a safe environment.

The Top End gets active

As services in the Northern Territory continued to expand, veterans and their families began to access free group physical training (PT) and group hydrotherapy classes, led by an exercise physiologist, to improve their health and wellbeing.

March

Creating community connections

More than just a 4-week archery skills workshop, the newly developed Community Connections Program was piloted in North Queensland with the aim to help veterans impacted by service find their place in the civilian world and make local connections.

Supporting partners and carers

A brand-new clinical program, the Partners & Carers Program was designed to support partners and carers of veterans and current serving Defence Force personnel by providing them with strategies to support their own mental health and wellbeing.

July

Expanding in Tasmania

Clinical and social services for veterans and their families in Tasmania grew as we welcomed an additional liaison officer for the North and Northwest, newly developed telehealth and online meeting rooms in Hobart and Launceston, as well as a new social worker.

August

Construction in the NT

It was an exciting milestone when construction commenced for the Northern Territory's new Veteran and Family Wellbeing Centre, located in Stuart Park, with the Minister for Veterans' Affairs, Matt Keogh touring the new site. Works are scheduled to finish shortly with the centre opening early next year.

Bridge to Brisbane

Over 400 Mates4Mates supporters walked, ran and wheeled to the finish line in this year's Bridge to Brisbane, an iconic charity fun-run held on 28 August. Mates4Mates was a proud charity partner this year, with over $15,000 raised for veterans and their families who have been impacted by service.

September

Women's Health Week Program

Successfully held across all our locations for the first time, this clinical program was designed to help women, both veterans and family members, increase their awareness and understanding of women's health topics and increase their physical and psychological wellbeing skills.

October

Veterans' Health Week

Supporting veterans' health and wellbeing, 'Eat Well' was the focus of this year's Veterans' Health Week. Thanks to funding from the Department of Veterans' Affairs, our centres offered a range of activities that provided education around making better nutritional choices.

Support from behind the screen.

"Our activities provide a safe space for veterans and family members to connect with each other and build strong authentic relationships."

— Kyle, Online Liaison Officer.

In-person support is not practical for every veteran. While geographical barriers tend to be first thought of, other boundaries such as service-related mental health impacts can make it difficult for veterans to access support this way. Online services can bridge this divide.

The ability to connect with a community of like-minded people, while feeling safe, has significant benefits in a veteran's recovery journey.

"We have seen people who were unable to leave the house now independent and driving themselves to appointments. We have seen people find new hobbies and passions that have reinvigorated their lives. We have seen smiles and so much laughter," explains Steve, the Regional Manager for Online Services.

"Our activities provide a safe space for veterans and family members to connect with each other and build strong authentic relationships," adds Kyle, Online Liaison Officer.

Starting with two weekly activities in April 2021, coffee catch-ups and trauma-informed yoga sessions, the online timetable has grown over the past 18 months. Activities in 2022 included a range of creative workshops as well as a second weekly coffee catch-up that is more suitable for veterans located in Western Australia.

'Jamie's Ministry of Food' cooking course received the greatest attendance, with the 'Introduction to Photography' activity always a fan favourite, booking out within mere hours. The monthly 'Trivia Night' also draws a crowd, with teams designing their own t-shirts and hats just for the occasion.

Designed as live and interactive experiences, the good news is that you only need an internet browser to access Mates4Mates online services. Behind the scenes though, the high-tech gear is required. The more complex activities include multiple cameras for streaming, camera stands to get the best angles, and video mixing desks, microphones and studio lighting.

"All of this is to try to put veterans and family members 'in the room' with us," adds Steve.

Mentally preparing for the holiday season.

Written by Tamsin Wallace, Mates4Mates Psychologist

The holiday season can be a challenging time for veterans and their family members who have been impacted by service. Post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), isolation and other challenges related to the holidays can be overwhelming or trigger an increase in symptoms.

Holidays can bring out the best in people but can also cause stress and tension. Shopping centres become more crowded and noisy and an increase in social activities can cause an exacerbation in anxiety and depression. Expectations of the 'perfect holiday' as often portrayed in the media can also be challenged by the reality of the holidays, further increasing distress and dissatisfaction.

Another common experience for veterans during the holiday season is feeling undeserving of celebrating and this may increase isolation. They may choose to not participate, avoid social events or use unhealthy strategies such as drinking alcohol to cope with an increase in anxious symptoms or to avoid painful memories.

Family members may also struggle as they cope with the demands of the season as well as the changes that may happen for their loved one who is struggling with PTSD or other mental health issues.

Overall, this time of year can bring a sense of loneliness and guilt, and this can have a significant impact on relationships with friends and family and increase the likelihood of interpersonal conflict.

While some might find it difficult to acknowledge the challenges of the holiday season and find it hard to reach out for help as a result, there is support available and communication is key. Whether it be letting your loved ones know you can get overwhelmed during this time or speaking with other veterans who feel the same way, this intentional communication with others can help decrease the feelings of isolation.

If you are feeling overwhelmed, it's okay to take time for yourself and step away from any situation if needed. Remember, you are just as deserving as anyone else in celebrating the holidays and you can use this time to engage in self-care and activities that are important to you and those you care about.

Advice from a psychologist on mentally preparing for the holiday season:

1. Communicate with loved ones.

While discussing your mental health will take vulnerability, it will allow your family or friends the opportunity to support you where they can and help them to understand what you are experiencing.

2. Seek professional support.

Talk to a mental health specialist, for example a psychologist, counsellor or social worker, to develop an individualised plan that will provide effective strategies for you to use over the holiday period.

3. Create a self-care plan.

Find the things that help 'fill your cup' and give you a better headspace to deal with the stress of holidays. This might be daily visualisations, exercising, taking time out in nature, or making a plan of events to attend, ensuring you don't feel overcommitted in social settings.

If you or someone you know is in crisis and needs immediate support over the holiday period, contact 000 or attend your nearest hospital. For 24-hour support, phone Open Arms: 1800 011 046 or Lifeline: 13 11 14.

VIETNAM VETERANS' DAY

Remembering Australia's service

The year 2022 marks 60 years since the start of Australia's involvement in the Vietnam War.

Commemorated every year on 18 August, Vietnam Veterans' Day provides an opportunity to honour and remember the sacrifices of those who died and thank the 60,000 Australians who served during the 10 years of our involvement in the Vietnam War – Australia's longest military engagement of the 20th century.

Over the decade-long commitment, 521 Australians died and some 3,000 were wounded. Fifteen thousand national servicemen, known as Nashos, served.

Vietnam veterans continue to contribute and play an important role in our ex-service community. Here, we chat with veterans and their families about their experience during the war and the circumstances they faced upon their return.

Lest we forget.

A day to embrace the recognition they deserve

LIKE so many others, veteran Roger Collins stepped up to defend his country when the call came to deploy servicemen to Vietnam.

Yet, unlike veterans before them, Roger says there was no fanfare when they returned home.

"There was nothing. Sometimes the recognition of what has transpired is more important than monetary compensation, for example," he says.

It wasn't until several years later that Roger was ready to get involved with the Defence community. He's now Secretary of Currumbin Palm Beach RSL Sub Branch and Deputy President of Gold Coast District RSL.

Joe Gates, committee member at Currumbin Palm Beach RSL Sub Branch, went to Vietnam with the 2nd Battalion, Royal Australian Regiment and had a similar experience upon coming home.

"I was in Vietnam for a year as a radio operator in the signal platoon of support company 2 RAR," he says. "I went back in 1971 with 4 RAR for another six months.

"Coming back to Australia was a bit strange. Some of us came by ship on the HMAS Sydney and others by aircraft. Both times I touched down in Townsville late at night and there was barely anybody in the building.

"I met my family, and we jumped in a cab and went home. We had been advised to wear civilian clothing because there'd be talk of possible protestors being around."

"We thought that after all this time, after being in Vietnam for 12 or 13 years and the war's finished and we were home, that there might be some recognition."

JUST HOW IT WAS

Roger, who joined the Navy when he was 16 years old, says talking about his time in Vietnam is something he's only recently started to do.

"I joined the Queensland Police Service after leaving the Navy and was active for 30 years. It has only been recently that my colleagues have discovered I served. We just didn't talk about it. It's sad, but that's what happened."

He started his Naval career with 12 months on HMAS Leeuwin in Fremantle, before joining HMAS Rushcutter for specialist diving training, and then being drafted to the HMAS Vampire (which is now at the Maritime Museum at Darling Harbour, Sydney).

"On board the HMAS Vampire we went to the Far East, the Southeast Asian Treaty Organisation and the Indonesian Confrontation was about to happen. We were a part of that, which ran concurrently with Australia's involvement in Vietnam," he says.

"The Vampire was also part of the escort of HMAS Sydney and the first battalion into Vietnam. I think the longest I spent at sea was 28 days, continuous patrolling up and down to Meleka Straits."

Roger left the Navy in 1969 and has recently enjoyed reconnecting with mates from those days.

"I didn't get involved with the RSL until the 1990s, after going to a Dawn Service with a mate. And now one of my grandsons is 28 years old and in the Air Force, and another, who is 18 years old, wants to join the Air Force. It makes me realise how young we were going off to battle at 16 or 17 years old.

"We weren't old enough to vote or legally go into a hotel, but we were able to go into war zones and operational ships.

"The whole memory of my service is the mateship. You make very firm friends, and they remain with you for your whole life," he shares.

THE IMPACT OF A DESIGNATED DAY TO COMMEMORATE

"Vietnam Veterans' Day is healing. It is a way we can honour the 500 that made the ultimate sacrifice and the thousands that were wounded. It is a day that can outlast us," Roger says.

"Having a service in recognition is an important part even all these years later. It is very, very important for all of us who didn't get any recognition in those days.

"We're hosting our second commemorative service this year, and I'd encourage any veteran who attends to embrace the ability to talk to people and reconnect.

"I'm very proud to be in a position where I can offer support and have a part to play in offering support for veterans. I love whatever role I can play in being involved in helping veterans improve their quality of life." ←

One war, one family and one battle to break the binds of PTSD

IT'S been 60 years since the Vietnam War rippled out in seismic waves across Southeast Asia.

But until just 12 months ago, RSL Queensland Executive Assistant Renata Rafferty could still feel its crippling effects.

The daughter of a Vietnam veteran and granddaughter to prisoners of war in Siberia and Germany, Renata grew up in a household shaped by post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD).

And it wasn't until October last year, when Renata accepted a job at Mates4Mates, that the 'battle after the war' finally abated.

Sharing her story as part of RSL

Queensland's commemoration of Vietnam Veterans' Day on 18 August, Renata said the long road to recovery was only possible through the organisation's lifesaving services.

"As soon as I saw that job description for Mates4Mates, I knew I'd found my purpose," she says.

"They offer these incredible services to veterans and their families, and I could see that it was the right support for my parents, the kind of support we'd always wanted."

THE BATTLE AFTER THE WAR

Renata's parents, Irena and Henryk

Fabisiak, met at a Polish dance in Sydney and fell in love soon after.

It was just after Vietnam, and while the joy of starting a family took centre stage, the hangover of the war sat like a heavy cloud in the background.

"Back then, if you served, it was like you were left on a ledge. People just walked away. People didn't want to know about the war, and they just didn't want to know you," Henryk says.

And then there was the PTSD.

"As soon as I entered a shop or a restaurant, I would immediately have to put my back against the wall. I had another friend who served who was the same. We had to make sure that we had eyes on the room.

"There was a lot of anxiety."

With good help hard to come by, and support services in Sydney doing little to heal the scars, Henryk learned to lean on alcohol – especially when ANZAC Day rolled around, and one drink turned into several.

THE LONG REACH OF TRAUMA

The devastating effects on her husband's mental health meant Irena, like many partners of veterans, was soon saddled with the role of "supporting backbone".

As the years trickled by, the secondary effects of PTSD also took their toll, and soon after, the cracks in their marriage began to show.

"As soon as I saw that job description for Mates4Mates, I knew I'd found my purpose. They offer these incredible services to veterans and their families, and I could see that it was the right support for my parents, the kind of support we'd always wanted."

"There was many a time where I thought, 'Is this really worth it? Is staying together really worth it?' Because you don't want to go through it all again. And it's bloody hard," she says.

"It's hard for the kids. It's hard for you and it's hard to see your partner going through it and you can't be there to help them because you don't know how to help them."

For Renata, it translated into a childhood all but devoid of emotion and years spent struggling to relearn them.

"I grew up idolising my dad and I didn't realise it was to my detriment, because I was idolising someone who was hiding their emotions and pushing everything down until one day, it just exploded," she says.

"We only found out later on how that affected us all.

"People just don't realise that PTSD can have a lasting and long-term effect on not only the person who is suffering from it, but the family that are trying to support and help.

"Because you feel like you have to be that support person for absolutely everyone."

THE ROAD TO RECOVERY

While it has been 60 years since Australia's involvement in the Vietnam War, it's only been a few months, Renata says, since her parents' healing journey started.

"Soon after I joined Mates4Mates, I started mentioning their veteran services in conversations to Mum and Dad and then I started dropping off flyers and newsletters. Eventually I got Mum on board and then Dad followed, and that was the key.

"They're now accessing psychology sessions and classes that are making the world of difference. It would have been just phenomenal if we had these around when we were growing up.

"Seeing how much Mates4Mates has helped, and seeing the change in my dad, it's just everything," she says.

"They now have that safe place, that place where they feel comfortable, and at Mates4Mates it's a one stop shop of services."

While Renata made the transition to RSL Queensland earlier this year, she says working for organisations that have such a positive and personal impact on her own life leaves her at a loss for words.

And that, she laughs, is something that doesn't happen often.

"Getting up and going to work each day, knowing that I'm making a difference in veteran's lives is all I can ask for." ←

Military life gave a sense of belonging

YOU can imagine that growing up in the 1950s in regional Queensland as a young Aboriginal boy wasn't always easy for Vietnam veteran Uncle Noel Pope.

Living in a community still guided by discriminatory laws that segregated Indigenous people, Uncle Noel grew up trying to find a place to belong.

The Wulli Wulli and Gooreng Gooreng man recounts going to the movies with his brother and having to sit on the opposite side to their non-Aboriginal friends.

"The little town that I was brought up in was experiencing all kinds of segregation and racism, but when I joined the military, it was the first time in my life that I was fully accepted," the RSL Life Member says.

"The day I enlisted to serve I agreed to defend and protect our country because that's who I am. I will always be a soldier, for the rest of my life."

SERVING IN VIETNAM

Uncle Noel served in the Royal Australian Infantry Corps and Australian Army Assistance Group Vietnam.

"My brother was called up to national service and as Aboriginal men in those days, our best job prospects were probably labour jobs, which weren't paying very much. When my brother went into national service, he called me and asked why I didn't try to enlist, too."

Uncle Noel was 22 in 1972 when he went to Vietnam, and he was one of the last 28 soldiers left in Vietnam as part of a guard and escort troupe that didn't return home until 1973.

"I served in Vietnam all up for 14 months. When I first started my training and was sent to Canungra, I never thought I was going to go to Vietnam, although I wanted to," he says.

"I enjoyed the training. I was really good at it, but because all of the media were saying our efforts in Vietnam were winding down, I never thought I would get there."

When they landed in Vietnam, Uncle Noel was shocked at the devastation.

"I wasn't expecting that when we arrived. Our role was to support the other serving groups and other Australians still on the ground. We were changed over to work as embassy guards, essentially.

"I was taken up to Cambodia and was part of a guard party for an embassy ambassador for peace talks."

COMING HOME

When he returned to Australia, Uncle Noel had almost finished serving his three-year contract with the Army and says his life changed a lot after coming home.

"I started questioning not only myself, but what I was doing and what I was going to achieve," he explains.

"Joining the military gave me equal footing and there was no racism in the military that I experienced. I felt very comfortable there."

"If we could ever build a bridge of reconciliation, it's where the white man puts the bolt in and the black man does up the nut. And if we use glue, the glue has to be called respect. That bridge will stand forever."

"But I wasn't okay. I had post-traumatic stress and it took me a while to find the right community to help me realise what I was going through."

"Still, I achieved all I wanted to. Being there when they lowered the Australian flag to signify the war was over, stays with me to this day."

NATURE HEALS

One place Uncle Noel says he found peace when he returned home was in the bush.

"The rocks, the hills, rivers and trees. They were all able to bring about change in some of the things I was working through. As an Aboriginal I knew the land, I knew how to survive on the land."

It wasn't until he came across the Theodore RSL Sub Branch many years later that he felt a level of comfort with his community again.

"I've been a part of this Sub Branch now for 11 or 12 years and I can look back on my life in the military and be proud of what I did."

"But today, the biggest thrill I get is watching my grandkids march."

As part of his work with the Sub Branch, Uncle Noel and his Sub Branch President co-created a program of retreats for veterans experiencing PTSD.

"We came up with our idea to give a more on-the-ground type of support for veterans. We would take veterans on a four- or five-day camp sometimes with their children," he says.

"Sitting around the campfire started a conversation among the group and brought everyone together."

"I started to study post-traumatic stress and found ways to help the veterans in our community. It wasn't rocket science or anything, it was just veterans talking to veterans."

"Still today, so many veterans want to shoulder it all themselves and the point I try to share with them is that you can't do it on your own."

As for the future, Uncle Noel's wisdom offers insight into what drove him when he enlisted and what gives him the motivation to keep supporting members of his RSL community today.

"If we could ever build a bridge of reconciliation, it's where the white man puts the bolt in and the black man does up the nut. And if we use glue, the glue has to be called respect. That bridge will stand forever." ←

CAREER CHANGE SPURS VETERAN TO REPRESENT AUSTRALIA AT INVICTUS GAMES

Competing in the Invictus Games has enabled Gaythorne RSL Sub Branch Advocate Taryn Barbara to restructure and rediscover her focus again.

LOSING the only career you've ever known – or planned for – wasn't something Gaythorne RSL Sub Branch Advocate Taryn Barbara expected.

The now-Brisbane-based mum of two was medically discharged from the Army after 14 years of service in 2018.

"I joined the Army straight after I finished school in 2004," she says.

She cultivated a Defence career, participating in a range of humanitarian operations including supporting flood clean up and becoming a physical training instructor. Unfortunately, a cumulative back and hip injury meant she was medically discharged.

"I tried rehab, which worked initially, but not long term – which meant I couldn't continue working in Defence. It was a hard time," she explains.

"I lost my identity, and everything I could once do, I couldn't do anymore. I wasn't sure where I could go from there."

PRESENTED A NEW FOCUS

During Taryn's transition to civilian life, a friend suggested she sign up for the Invictus Games and Taryn made the team.

The Games are a multi-national sporting event for wounded, injured or sick service men and women, and have been held in London, Orlando, Toronto, Sydney and The Hague (2022).

"After I left Defence, one of the biggest things I noticed was that when things around you aren't great you tend to focus on all the things that aren't in your life anymore. It can be difficult to set goals when you're in that headspace.

"Being selected to be on the Invictus Games team in 2018 and 2022 let me restructure and rediscover my focus again.

For more information about the Invictus Games, visit invictusgamesfoundation.org

Having to go to training, being involved in something, really let me start to see things positively again."

Taryn competed in swimming, volleyball and powerlifting and won five medals, including four gold and one silver. She says it is humbling to see others around you with similar stories.

"It is quite humbling to see others around you in a similar circumstance. You can help each other out. Everyone has good and bad days, and in that environment, everyone knows what you're going through. They understand what you're talking about – you all speak the same language."

A NEW FRAME OF MIND

Competing at that level helped Taryn find structure again in her personal life.

"When you leave Defence, the structure you are used to is one thing you lose as well. So, getting back into training and having to go out – even when I didn't feel like it – let me restructure my life. And I got to bring people along with me and help them out."

She says competing at the Games was absolutely amazing.

"There are so many people there from all different walks of life, who have had something challenging come their way. And you're seeing them just push forward and kick goals. I can't put into words what the atmosphere was like. It was very inspiring."

Taryn says post-Invictus Games, she has started setting some smaller challenges for herself.

"Swimming is one of my main sports and it's something I've really had to learn. There is a lot of technique to it."

Taryn volunteers her time helping fellow veterans in her role as an Advocate and is a big supporter of the community Gaythorne RSL Sub Branch has given her.

"We don't connect with our RSL Sub Branches enough. Just being a part of the community has been great and allowed me to give something back. I went through my own tough time, and I see a lot of others in a similar place. I can offer them a friendly face to turn to and know they're heard."

"Just come and say hello to people. Some people aren't sure what the atmosphere will be like, and they can be reluctant to come and see. It's a welcoming environment and if anyone is wanting to meet like-minded people or help in general – your local RSL Sub Branch is definitely a place to start." ←

Career steps

GUIDED BY A COMMUNITY THAT UNDERSTANDS YOU

Ex-serving Defence member Jacinta served for more than 18 years before taking the leap into civilian life. Her project coordination skills – along with guidance from the RSL Employment Program team – supported her to work in Government, not-for-profits and now as a Project Manager for Boeing Defence Australia.

FINDING an employer who not only understands but encourages your unique strengths and sees your transferable skills as an asset can sometimes be like finding a needle in a haystack.

But they do exist, and RSL Employment Program partner organisations like Suncorp and Boeing are proof that you can find meaningful employment as you look to shape your career after leaving Defence. Likewise, they are organisations where you are not only welcomed, but introduced to a community to help you thrive.

With support from the RSL Employment Program, an evidence-based service that helps employers understand the value of hiring ex-serving Defence members and their partners, you can be 'always prepared' and ready to put your best foot forward.

SEEING BOTH SIDES OF THE COIN

Alex O'Connor, Talent Acquisition Specialist at Boeing, has experience on both sides of the fence. As the partner of a current-serving Defence member, she is familiar with having to move every few years for your partner's work, and in her role with Boeing is responsible for hiring ex-serving Defence members.

Alex, whose husband served in the Army as a Nursing Officer for more than 20 years, says they travelled up and down the eastern coast of Australia while supporting his career.

"We've moved from Townsville to Brisbane to Melbourne and back to Townsville again. And during this he's been deployed within Australia and overseas," she explains.

HIRING THROUGH THE LENS OF A SHARED EXPERIENCE

As both a recruitment specialist and the partner of an ex-serving Defence member, Alex knows it can be hard for ex-serving members and their partners to translate their experience and skills to civilian roles or explain why they have had to move jobs so often.

"Veterans or ex-ADF members are facing something unknown to them when they leave," she says.

"A lot of organisations don't understand how to read a CV of someone who has served in the military.

"They bring such value to an organisation – an openness to change and an adaptability, as well as resilience. They can look for solutions to work as a team and come up with a positive outcome."

One example is Boeing Project Manager and ex-serving member Jacinta Veitch, who was referred through the RSL Employment Program.

Jacinta, who served for more than 18 years and is now the Project Manager on the Wedgetail aircraft for Boeing Defence Australia, says she's found a supportive environment that is rich in culture, diversity and inclusion.

"As veterans, we have some amazing skills that translate well into the civilian world – like quickly adapting to new environments, accepting guidance and direction, and having independence to work on our own," she says.

"I had worked up to the rank of Major before I left Defence. When you leave, like many other ex-Defence members, I found it hard to know what industry and what job I would like to do. I wanted something that would maximise my strengths and abilities."

"I was lucky that in the years leading up to leaving I had been involved in project roles, including coordinating Defence exercises, so I had transferable skills that I knew could translate. Still, putting those skills into civilian terminology so employers would understand what I could bring to an organisation was something I needed help with."

LEADING BY EXAMPLE

Alex champions the way Boeing welcomes the ex-serving community and gives them a sense of belonging.

"We have many veteran employees around the world, and we have a Boeing Veterans Working Group. We find it gives them a familiar sense of community and lets them see they aren't alone.

"They see first-hand that others have done it before them and find that new support network. Anecdotally, I've been told from veterans who have joined Boeing that they felt like they've joined another family because we do have such a tight-knit veteran community."

THE HELP YOU NEED TO TAKE STEPS AHEAD

Jacinta is an advocate for any ex-serving members to reach out to the RSL Employment Program.

"I was able to make links into roles and organisations that I otherwise wouldn't have been able to," she shares. "The program was able to help me review my CV and really support my search for work outside of Defence.

"If you've left Defence, start the process. They are there to help you find the right fit for you."

WONDAI VETERAN RECOGNISED FOR SERVICE

It took 75 years for 96-year-old Leonard McLeod to be recognised for his extensive service to our Defence Forces, with the awarding of the 1939-45 Star.

LEONARD – or Len to his mates – is likely the last surviving Australian veteran to be issued the award, which made his recent participation in the Sydney ANZAC Day March even more bittersweet.

"It was a marvellous reception. They received us very well. It was unbelievable to see," he says.

"To see the reception personally and the people lined up along the side of the road – it must have been five or so thousand.

"ANZAC Day was one of the best things. I felt bad in a way that my friends and fellow veterans all around the islands we operated in didn't get any recognition. And now I'm going down to Sydney, leading a march, thousands of people lining the streets to clap us along."

It was only for his daughter seeing an advert in a local paper calling out for anyone's parents or family members who had served in the Small Ships to call, that he was made aware of their participation in the ANZAC Day March.

A COMMUNITY TO MAKE IT REAL

Len is a member of Wondai RSL Sub Branch, which, together with the Wide Bay Burnett District, was able to help fundraise the cost needed to send Len to Sydney to attend.

Wondai RSL Sub Branch President David Scrimgeour is clearly moved as we talk, showing how much it meant to him and their community to be able to help Len attend the ANZAC Day March.

"We worked with our District President Trevor Williamson to submit an application to the Charitable Objects Fund to seek a grant to help us get Len to Sydney. It covered his flights and accommodation so that he could take part in this truly special day," David says.

"When Len returned from Sydney, we were able to present him with a medallion from the US Army Small Ships Association together with a Certificate of Appreciation, which we'll display in the entry to the Wondai Diggers Memorial and Citizens Club."

The hotel that Len and his family stayed in while in Sydney – The Grace Hotel – was also symbolic as it is the site of where Len enlisted in the Small Ships at just 18 years old.

The US Army Small Ships consisted mostly of Australians who were considered too old, too young, or medically unfit to serve in the Armed Forces during the war. Their work was known as 'Mission X' and the 3,000 strong troupe served alongside US Army personnel and other nationalities including New Zealanders, Canadians, Chinese, Danes, and Filipinos.

But it wasn't Len's first time in the Defence Force.

"I first joined the Army when I was 15," he shares. "I was as tall as any of the 18-year-olds enlisting alongside me. I was about six-foot-one in those days.

"I would go in as my friends who were already 18 enlisted. They'd ask me how old I was, and I'd say 21. They'd look me up and down before throwing me out."

Hearing Len recount his service history is like hearing the pitch for a Hollywood action movie. By the time he joined Small Ships he had already enlisted four times under three different names, 'celebrated' his 16th birthday in Papua New Guinea, served as a 'biscuit bomber' dropping essential supplies to troops, and hiked through the Papua New Guinea jungle solo with tropical dysentery and dengue fever to return to safety.

A SERVICE HISTORY KEPT OUT OF THE SPOTLIGHT

After serving in the Small Ships, Len says no-one knew anything of the work he and his peers had done as part of the troupe.

"I would tell workmates about what we had done, and I felt like they looked at me as if I was making it up," he says. "So, I decided I wouldn't say a word to anyone, except my daughters. For about 50 years I never heard the words Small Ships."

Shortly after Len moved into a nursing home, Small Ships' secretary Daniel O'Brien visited him.

"It was the first time I had heard the name mentioned in so long. And that's where this whole journey really started."

The visit was organised by Len's daughter, Denise, who contacted Daniel after reading something about the Small Ships.

"I found an email address and phone number and called him," she says. "My sister and I knew Dad's story but no one else talked about it.

"When I read 'Small Ships' all his stories came back to me. When I called Daniel, he came at the first opportunity and the rest is history."

Today, Len lives in Wondai with his daughter Denise and son-in-law. ☛

HONOURING THE LIFE OF VETERAN JOE COTTRELL

WWII veteran and Sandgate RSL Sub Branch member Joe Cottrell sadly passed away just weeks after celebrating his 100th birthday. Surrounded by his mates, family and RSL members, Joe celebrated his milestone birthday on 30 July 2022.

BELOW: World War II veteran and Sandgate RSL Sub Branch member Joe Cottrell, front centre, with, from left, Sandgate RSL Sub Branch Acting President Don Baker, LTCOL John Anderson, Joe's son Rick Cottrell, and daughter Susan Bathson, Sub Branch secretary Andrew Law and Sub Branch Wellbeing Officer Terry Slader.

JOE served in the British Army from 1939 until 1943 when he was injured, and he moved to Australia in the 1950s as a '10-pound Pom.' A patriot, at 17 he was too young initially to join the Army in WWII, so instead joined the Lightkeepers – a form of British home guard.

When old enough, he enlisted and was allocated as a paratrooper to 1st Parachute Battalion (the Red Berets). Formed in 1941 from volunteers from various infantry regiments, it became part of the 1st Parachute Brigade, the only airborne infantry unit from Britain that served in Africa.

In 1943, after completing training, he made his first 'operational jump' into North Africa. After weeks of patrolling, raiding and contacts across their Battalion area of operations, Joe's platoon encountered German soldiers occupying some high ground. Joe Cottrell sought cover from the open ground in a nearby ravine.

"I moved across open ground until I got to a ravine where there was some cover. All of sudden I heard a ping, then another ping on my helmet," Joe says.

That ping was a bullet hitting the helmet he was wearing. Joe was knocked out, suffering a head wound.

"I was injured and lucky enough to be picked up in a jeep by friendly forces. When I woke up, I saw angels and thought I had gone to heaven."

Those angels were the nurses that cared for him while he was in hospital.

Sandgate RSL Sub Branch Acting President Don Baker says Joe's story illustrates the rich tapestry of experiences within our veteran community and the shared military history between Britain and Australia.

"Our veterans are truly remarkable," Don says.

"It was an honour to be able to visit with Joe, a member of our RSL, in his 100th year and listen to his story. A story of sacrifice and service to country. A story that many of our serving, ex-serving and families share through their connections to our Defence Force."

Lieutenant Colonel John Anderson, the Chief of Staff 16th Aviation Brigade, says Joe's 100th birthday was a great opportunity to connect with the veteran community.

"It's not every day you get to spend time with an ex-serving member in their centenarian year," LTCOL Anderson says.

"I feel honoured to represent the Army and very privileged to have met Joe and presented him with a certificate from the RSL for his 100th birthday while listening to his extraordinary stories."

Don says that Joe's passing will be felt by everyone who knew him.

"Joe was a gentleman and an absolute character of our Sub Branch. When presented with the ANF from Anika Wells MP at our monthly social event, he provided us with insight into the history of the Sandgate RSL, including dances on a Friday night and other social meetups. His parting comments were, 'I'm so impressed to see that this same type of spirit still lives on. As you walk in here you can feel that belonging and it is wonderful. God bless you all.'"

"He will be sorely missed by all that had contact with him." ←

FORMER TECHNICAL SAILOR FINDS HAVEN IN THE ARTS

A new mental pursuit helped Former Warrant Officer and Edge Hill/Cairns West RSL Sub Branch member Mark Richardson through a life-changing ordeal.

MARK had a long Navy career – serving 27 years within the Marine Engineering department. His career took him to a range of interesting locations, including ports throughout the Middle East as part of a deployment to HMAS Kanimbla (II) in 2002.

After discharging from the Navy in 2007, Mark worked as an engineering manager at Green Island, located immediately off the Cairns coastline, before retiring.

Unfortunately, Mark contracted an infection in his right foot, which would drastically change the course of his life.

Having been a 'can do' sailor for the previous 27 years, Mark ignored the pain. So, by the time he and his wife, Kerry, attended the emergency department, they were told what no one wants to hear: Mark would have to have the limb amputated.

As a result, Mark was left with a profound sense of loss and an unshakeable low mood that followed him everywhere.

To focus on something completely different and novel, the former Technical Sailor enrolled in a Bachelor of Arts course at James Cook University.

"I enrolled in the Bachelor of Arts to keep my mind active," Mark says.

"Physically, I could not do what I used to; however, this was not an issue with studying. My wife, Kerry, noticed an improvement in my mood straight away so I continued studying until successfully completing my degree last year."

After graduating with distinction, Mark went searching for a new pursuit and is now the new Edge Hill/Cairns West RSL Sub Branch Secretary.

The role sees Mark putting the knowledge and discipline gained from his degree to great use. Along with collecting and curating material on military history, including World War II, Mark delivers presentations and guest speeches on military history at his Sub Branch's monthly coffee catch-ups.

"We are extremely fortunate to have someone like Mark on the team," Edge Hill/Cairns West RSL Sub Branch President Kristen Rice says.

VETERAN ADVOCATE AMONG LAST AUSTRALIANS TO BE AWARDED OAM BY QUEEN ELIZABETH II

Kevin Winkleman has been advocating for veterans for more than 25 years. The Townsville local received his Medal of the Order of Australia (OAM) in the General Division in recognition of his services to veterans and their families in Australia's largest garrison city.

KEVIN was one of 51 Queenslanders awarded an OAM in the Queen's Birthday Honours list announced by Premier Annastacia Palaszczuk in June 2022, placing him among the last in the nation to receive the honour from Queen Elizabeth II. He assists veterans and their families with claims to the Department of Veterans' Affairs in his current role as Pension Officer and Advocate at the Townsville RSL Sub Branch.

Kevin's passion for advocating for the needs of veterans stems from his lived experience as part of the Defence community, with several of his family members having served with the Australian Defence Force (ADF).

"The satisfaction is there, helping them to achieve ongoing help, which is a result of their ADF service. We've helped them get the help they needed," he says.

RSL Queensland State President MAJGEN Stephen Day DSC AM says he was grateful to Kevin for his lifetime of commitment to service, which was representative of the RSL's core values.

"On behalf of RSL Queensland, I would like to extend our congratulations and give thanks to Kevin for his long-standing dedication, generosity and advocacy work, which has enriched the lives of countless Queensland veterans and their families," Stephen says.

"Kevin represents the commitment to stand shoulder to shoulder with our veteran community, which is central to everything we do at RSL Queensland."

Kevin says he almost did not accept the OAM, with the news of the honour arriving on the same day one of his referees passed away.

"I ummed and ahed about whether I would accept it, but he would actually want me to go ahead and do it, so I did," Kevin says. ←

RSL QUEENSLAND ADVOCATE DELIVERS FINANCIAL SECURITY TO THE FAMILY OF A DYING VETERAN

RSL Queensland Advocate Deanna Pringle was able to bring some peace to Army veteran Garry Fairleigh in his final days.

 Sarah Webb

WHEN Cathy Fairleigh looks back over the past couple of years, it's impossible to hold back tears.

Her husband Garry, a veteran who served for 20 years in the Australian Army, was diagnosed with a malignant melanoma that led to a 16-month battle before the doctors admitted defeat in December.

Garry lost that battle on Boxing Day in 2021.

"When we were presented with that diagnosis and told there was nothing the doctors could do it just took the feet out from under us," says Cathy.

"We went from being a family who thought we were on top of this melanoma to being a family that had to quickly figure out how to say goodbye. His pain medication wasn't being metabolised because his liver was completely compromised.

"His only wish was to be at home with his family and with the help of many caring people we were able to achieve that very quickly."

It was in those final weeks that Garry discussed with Cathy his concerns for her future and that of their family.

"I said, 'Why don't I go and talk to an Advocate at RSL Queensland and see if there is any way for them to help us?'

"Garry was a typical vet who didn't like asking for help, but this time he said yes," Cathy says.

"He was worried for me. I had no idea what services we could access or what RSL Queensland could do. All I knew was that Garry had a part pension from injuries he received during his Army service.

"I thought maybe we'd be able to get some help with what we expected to be a lengthy time of caring for Garry at home.

"So, I reached out, and that's when I met Deanna Pringle."

Deanna, a Compensation Advocate based out of the Toowoomba office, who served in the Defence Force before transitioning into the Reserves, was quick to act knowing Garry's time was coming to an end.

"Our first meeting was at 10am at the RSL office. Deanna started going through the support that was available and then said she could apply for a Veteran Gold Card for Garry. But she warned me that it could take time," Cathy says.

"I left that office and four hours later she called and said, 'I can't believe I'm telling you this, but Garry has been approved for a Gold Card.'"

"When I passed on the news to Garry he just cried and cried. He said, 'You'll be alright now.'"

"Before Garry's discharge from the hospital, we had made some alterations to the property so he could be comfortable. This Gold Card meant we'd get financial assistance to cover those costs, not to mention assistance for medications.

"And for Garry, well, this meant he could relax and just enjoy his time with our girls and their families."

Garry was first diagnosed in June 2020. Over the course of 16 months, he underwent six surgeries and 25 radiation treatments while also receiving immunotherapy.

In December, at Garry's insistence, the family all came together for a final family photo shoot.

“During that time, she took all the care and concern over compensation processes away. And while I know it’s part of her job description, there are people who simply do their job, and that’s fine, but then there are those who do it with such beautiful grace and compassion and that was Deanna.”

Garry passed away just days later.

While it’s a story more akin to a rollercoaster that never fails to bring tears to Cathy’s eyes, she said Deanna had become a beacon of light in their darkest moments.

“During that time, she took all the care and concern over compensation processes away. And while I know it’s part of her job description, there are people who simply do their job, and that’s fine, but then there are those who do it with such beautiful grace and compassion and that was Deanna,” Cathy says. “She made such a difference to our lives.”

For Deanna, who joined RSL Queensland in January 2020, it’s indeed more than just a job; it’s a means to change and improve the lives of veterans and their families.

“Before this role, I served for several years and then ended up recruiting for Defence. During my time I had some injuries, but getting medical support from DVA isn’t always straightforward,” she says.

“It was so incredibly stressful trying to get my own claims in, and after it all I just wanted to create a streamlined process.

“Now, as a Compensation Advocate, I can do that. I get to support people through their initial claims process and if we’ve got a diagnosis, I can submit a claim on their behalf through the Department of Veterans’ Affairs (DVA).

“And that’s how I met Cathy. She’s a beautiful lady and when we were able to get that Gold Card for her and Garry in a matter of hours, she just couldn’t thank me enough. She sent a morning tea platter around and she wrote me a personal letter as well, and the effort she put in was so humbling.

“It makes the tough days doing this job really worthwhile. And making the toughest time in Cathy’s life a little easier is a strong reminder of why I do this job.”

NEW GMRF RESEARCH REVEALS THE CHALLENGES OF EMPLOYMENT AFTER SERVICE

New research published by our research partners, Gallipoli Medical Research Foundation (GMRF), highlights the main challenges faced by veterans in finding and keeping employment after service. Results show that management strategies could be the key to supporting veterans through this transition.

GALLIPOLI
MEDICAL RESEARCH FOUNDATION

LED by RSL Queensland's ANZAC of the Year Award recipient and GMRF Principal Investigator, Dr Madeline Romaniuk, the Veteran Mental Health Unit research team explored the experiences of 35 Australian veterans who had experienced civilian employment post-discharge.

The findings revealed four main challenges for veterans in finding and retaining employment.

1. Starting over

Research participants said that challenges to employment included finding and applying for civilian jobs, finding meaningful work, starting at the bottom again and difficulty translating military skills to the civilian workforce.

"I just felt that it was going to take me years to establish credibility and time and learn a new system again, so that was frustrating and just worn out," says one research participant.

2. Mental health

Veterans with a mental health condition reported experiencing perceived discrimination from employers about their treatment needs and about how this, as well as their symptoms, might impact their ability to get their job done.

"When I said, 'Look, I am having some trouble. I have got some mental health issues. I have got to have some time out and go into hospital', within three months I was gone," reported another research participant.

3. Interpersonal cultural difficulties

Results uncovered serious challenges faced by veterans when communicating with, and working alongside, civilian colleagues. These included different language and communication styles, lack of teamwork and focus on the individual, misperceptions of military service, and variation in work ethic and professionalism. "They use different words that I don't understand because I have never been exposed to them and I don't know how to translate my words to their words because I actually don't know the civilian equivalent of what I am trying to say," is a frustration of another research participant.

4. Organisational differences

The differences between military and civilian organisational systems also proved to be a barrier to stable employment, particularly the lack of structure, role ambiguity and the lack of feedback apparent in civilian settings in comparison to Defence.

“Whether veterans are transitioning into civilian life or relocating, we know that finding meaningful employment is crucial in helping create purpose and direction.”

“My job description kept changing and it was driving me mad,” explained another participant. “I just needed that structure. I am so happy to work within a structure.”
“These themes highlight the need for evidence-based ‘transition to employment’ initiatives to target factors affecting not just obtaining employment initially, but also employment retention among veterans,” says Dr Romaniuk.

HOW DOES THIS RESEARCH HELP VETERANS?

Findings from this research informed educational modules and information that RSL Queensland offers employers as part of the national RSL Employment Program.

Dr Romaniuk noted that research into veteran employment was vital to understanding the factors that contribute to the difficulties that veterans face in obtaining and retaining civilian employment.
RSL Queensland funded this research as part of its partnership with GMRF, which is focused on helping veterans by enhancing their health and wellbeing through evidence-based programs.
“RSL Queensland is proud to partner with Gallipoli Medical Research Foundation and fund this important piece of research,” says Troy Watson, RSL Queensland Deputy CEO Veteran Services.
“Whether veterans are transitioning into civilian life or relocating, we know that finding meaningful employment is crucial in helping create purpose and direction. Our award-winning RSL Queensland Employment Program recognises this and helps veterans and Defence partners secure employment through career counselling, application assistance, interview coaching, and connections with potential employers.”

RSL Queensland’s aim is to connect veterans with long-term, meaningful employment and to help employers tap into the talent pool of veterans who are ready to work.
“We remain committed to investing in research, targeted programs and proven initiatives to make the transition from service to civilian life as easy, smooth and accessible as possible,” says Troy.

Rev Bob Rogers, Shane Warhurst, Bruce Meiklejohn, Bob Standfast, Fay Coman and Richard Morse (pictured) bring the total of Sub Branch Life Members to six and Citizens' Auxiliary Life Members to six.

NATIONAL PEACEKEEPERS DAY IN BURLEIGH HEADS

On 14 September, the Burleigh Heads RSL Sub Branch gathered at the cenotaph in Memorial Park with members from the ADF, Australian Federal Police, and Queensland and NSW Police Services to commemorate National Peacekeepers Day. The guest speaker was Commander Danielle Woodward APM OAM and the Currumbin RSL Choir sang the national anthem.

CALOUNDRA MEMBER AUTHORS BOOK ABOUT PTSD

Caloundra RSL Sub Branch member Dave Morgan recently published his third book, The Invisible Trauma. Dave wrote the book to help Australians understand what war is like – especially the Vietnam War – and how post-traumatic stress disorder affects an individual and their family. He hopes the book will help improve the wellbeing, mental health, and lifestyle of veterans and their families. A portion of sale proceeds will be donated to Legacy Australia.

NEW LOOK FOR CROWS NEST TEAM

Crows Nest RSL Sub Branch's bar staff and committee proudly wear their new uniform shirts (pictured). The new-look uniforms let the team proudly 'show off' the RSL Queensland logo and represent their Sub Branch.

KOREAN WAR VETERANS HONOURED

Members of Gracemere and District RSL Sub Branch Inc honoured their two Korean War veterans, 94-year-old Vince Mathers and 88-year-old Geoffrey Arnold (pictured), both ex-3RAR, with a lunch at Gracemere Hotel. These two veterans shared camaraderie and banter with the younger veterans and reminisced about their individual experiences during their respective deployments to Korea while they pored over their memorabilia.

CAPTURING THE SOLDIER'S EXPERIENCE

After serving more than 30 years as a soldier in the Australian Army, Tweed Heads and Coolangatta RSL Sub Branch member Michael Kiker retired and turned his hand to writing. "I love the challenge of converting my many story ideas into exciting books I hope my readers will enjoy," Michael says. During his many years of service, he was told numerous interesting stories by soldiers from different conflicts, usually over a beer. While his books are fiction, Michael tries to include some of these true-life tales into his writing. "By doing this, I hope it gives my readers a chance to experience the life and death situations many of my mates have been in," he explains. Michael has published a trilogy set during the Vietnam War and a stand-alone book about a young man from Beechworth fighting on the Kokoda Track.

99 YEARS YOUNG

AUSTRALIAN PEACEKEEPERS DAY

Hervey Bay RSL Sub Branch President Brian Tidyman spoke at the service to remember peacekeepers from the ADF and Australian Police Service. Locals, visitors and ex-service organisations gathered at the Cenotaph in Freedom Park and more than 10 wreaths were laid. Rev'd Jeff Jarvis offered prayers to those who lost their lives in their duties as well as those currently deployed in peacekeeping operations worldwide.

IPSWICH WINS GOLDEN RIVET COMPETITION

The Ipswich Flamingos (pictured) have taken home first place in this year's Golden Rivet Competition, held in September by the Naval Association of Australia Ipswich & West Moreton Sub Section. Teams from Redcliffe, Pine Rivers, WRANS and Ipswich competed in darts and indoor bowls in an attempt to claim the treasured trophy.

QUEENAGERS WELLBEING AND FRIENDSHIP DAY

Malanda RSL Sub Branch members recently celebrated Seniors' Week with an event at the Malanda Hotel. The event promoted physical and mental health and was brought together by local veteran women, giving them a chance to meet and bond with other veterans.

MUDJIMBA'S OLDEST MEMBER CELEBRATES 96TH BIRTHDAY

Mudjimba RSL Sub Branch's oldest member David Pescott recently celebrated his 96th birthday. The Sub Branch describes David as one of their biggest supporters and 'Uncle Dave', as he is known, says the Sub Branch has always been somewhere he knows he can find camaraderie and support. It was also a fitting venue for his birthday celebrations (David pictured in 1944).

VIETNAM VETERANS' DAY IN MILES

Vietnam veteran Roger Wickham addresses a small gathering at the Miles RSL Sub Branch commemorative service on Vietnam Veterans' Day.

As COVID restrictions eased, Stanthorpe RSL Sub Branch welcomed more than 120 veterans, students, school staff and local community members to their Vietnam Veterans' Day service.

50-YEAR MEMBERSHIP ANNIVERSARIES CELEBRATED

Walkerstone-Pleystowe RSL Sub Branch members Dennis Doring and Allan Norman have both been awarded their 50th membership certificates by local member Julianne Gilbert MP. Dennis and Allan both joined the Sub Branch in 1970 after serving in Vietnam. Unfortunately, Allan passed away before he could be presented with his certificate. His wife Liz accepted in his honour.

VIETNAM VETERANS' DAY IN WARWICK

Warwick veterans commemorated Vietnam Veterans' Day at the cenotaph in Leslie Park, with special guests including former SDESA secretary Barry Kelly, SDESA Qld Chaplain Willie Liebenberg, members of Warwick RSL Sub Branch, including President John Skinner, various schools, and the public. Four Year 11 students (pictured) participated in the ceremony accompanied by Principal Ross Jardine, and two wreaths were laid on behalf of Warwick State High School.

Stopping in London, President Nigel Allsopp visited the Chindit memorial and presented a bronze plaque to honour the animals that served during the campaign – 5,000 mules and horses, and 100 elephants. The plaque is expected to be displayed in the National Memorial Arboretum in Staffordshire.

REMEMBERING A CAREER WITH RAF

At 91, ex-serviceman Derek Olley has no intention of slowing down. The former Royal Air Force officer is an active volunteer in the Restoration Support Section (RSS) of the Air Force's History and Heritage Branch at RAAF Base Amberley. When Derek started his apprenticeship in 1947, George VI was the King of England. "I was given the King's shilling as a new recruit," he says. Derek served the RAF as a flight mechanic, working on various aircraft types including Avro Ansons, Avro Lancaster bombers, de Havilland Mosquitoes and Hawker Hurricanes.

WIN

THE WITNESS

At the Australian war crimes trials that followed World War II, one prosecution witness stood out: Warrant Officer Bill Sticpewich.

During his three years in the infamous Sandakan POW camp, Sticpewich had seen hundreds of fellow prisoners die of starvation, sickness and overwork. Others were shot or bayoneted to death by Japanese guards on forced marches through the Borneo jungle. Of more than 2,400 Allied prisoners at Sandakan at the start of 1945, only six survived. It was Sticpewich's meticulous evidence that sent Sandakan's commandant and his murderous henchmen to the gallows.

But to his fellow prisoners, Sticpewich was not a war hero; he was a collaborator who avoided heavy labour and obtained extra rations by ingratiating himself with the Japanese.

Was Sticpewich a traitor or a man who did what he needed to do to stay alive? Drawing on wartime records, original interviews and the recollections of other survivors, The Witness reveals the compelling story of Australia's most notorious POW.

The Witness by Tom Gilling is published by Allen and Unwin (RRP: $34.99).

FOR YOUR CHANCE TO WIN one of four copies of The Witness, email your name, address and contact number to editor@rslqld.org (with the subject 'The Witness') or post to 'The Witness', PO Box 629, Spring Hill Qld 4004. Competition closes 24 January 2023.

DUNKIRK TO D-DAY

Another rip-roaring World War II history by prize-winning author Jeff Steel. Bill Adlam's hair-raising escape from Dunkirk, his dramatic commando raids, and his storming of the D-Day beaches reads like fiction. It all happened.

Bill escaped the Dunkirk disaster via a bayonet charge into Nazi machine guns. He was presented with the Military Medal 'for gallantry under fire' by King George VI. Bill volunteered for commandos; he thrived on adrenaline.

Number 4 commando took him to a surgical strike in the north of Norway. The stated objective: to destroy oil installations. It was a feint. Ian Fleming of the Secret Intelligence Service had masterminded the raid. Its real objective: to help break the Enigma code.

Number 4 Commando then sent him on a raid to Dieppe to spike naval guns to enable a landing by Canadian forces. Bill's commanding officer was Lord Lovat: cousin to Ian Fleming and (allegedly) template for the fictional James Bond.

Bill's prowess as a commando saw him headhunted to a top-secret location in the wilds of Scotland. There he trained others in the dark arts of 'butcher and bolt'.

On D-Day morning, Bill passed over the sands of Normandy in minutes. The next two months saw him up against Hitler's elite army and Waffen SS divisions. The reader will ask the same question that Bill asked: how would he ever come out alive?

Dunkirk to D-Day by Jeff Steel and Linda Adlam is published by Simon & Schuster (RRP: $32.99).

FOR YOUR CHANCE TO WIN one of four copies of Dunkirk to D-Day, email your name, address and contact number to editor@rslqld.org (with the subject 'Dunkirk to D-Day') or post to 'Dunkirk to D-Day', PO Box 629, Spring Hill Qld 4004. Competition closes 24 January 2023.

FOR YOUR CHANCE TO WIN one of four copies of The Art of Sacrifice, email your name, address and contact number to editor@rslqld.org (with the subject 'The Art of Sacrifice') or post to 'The Art of Sacrifice', PO Box 629, Spring Hill Qld 4004. Competition closes 24 January 2023.

THE ART OF SACRIFICE

Haunting and poignant, this collection of portraits from renowned Melbourne artist George Petrou portrays a spirit like no other – the ANZAC spirit.

Ordinary people – Australians from all walks of life – have served our great nation with gallantry and sacrifice, displaying mateship, resilience and devotion to duty. The Art of Sacrifice captures the spirit of service in a fitting tribute to all ANZACs of every generation.

Using images of the past and the stories of today, the artist travels Australia and overseas to connect the past and present in a unique, powerful and evocative collection of outstanding portraits. It is a stunning contribution to the understanding and commemoration of all those who have served our great country.

The Art of Sacrifice by George Petrou is published by Big Sky Publishing (RRP: $69.99).

THE GLASS CRICKET BALL

The one-armed Melbourne artist Napier Waller OBE CMG created the great Hall of Memory at the Australian War Memorial in Canberra. Waller died in 1972, without knowing that 20 years later his greatest work would be the place for a tomb that would be central to Australia's remembrance of war dead.

The Glass Cricket Ball is a story of Waller's life, the creation of a great artwork and the bringing home and re-burial of the remains of an unknown Australian soldier from a French World War I battleground cemetery.

Napier Waller was a casualty at the battle of Bullecourt. A watercolour artist on the Western Front should be out of his comfort zone when his wounds include the loss of his right painting arm. But Napier Waller's answer was to become Australia's greatest monumental artist – with his left hand.

The Glass Cricket Ball by Jan William Smith is published by Big Sky Publishing (RRP: $29.99).

FOR YOUR CHANCE TO WIN one of three copies of The Glass Cricket Ball, email your name, address and contact number to editor@rslqld.org (with the subject 'The Glass Cricket Ball') or post to 'The Glass Cricket Ball', PO Box 629, Spring Hill Qld 4004. Competition closes 24 January 2023.

RSL
Art Union

Nothing like it.

THERE were moments of pure disbelief, ecstasy and irony when Redcliffe man Chris* was told he'd won RSL Art Union Draw 399 – the $10.6 million ultimate Gold Coast beach house.

Chris was initially speechless when Deborah Pescott, RSL Art Union General Manager of Lotteries, Commercial & Investments, called with the news. And ironically, he took the phone call while in Coolangatta for work – only minutes away from the amazing million-dollar prize home at Currumbin that he'd just won!

Chris, whose grandfather served in the Defence Force, has been supporting RSL Art Union for some time and has only dreamt of winning – that dream is now a reality!

With uninterrupted ocean views, four bedrooms, two bathrooms, a swimming pool and $322,594 worth of furniture and appliances, this breathtaking Currumbin prize home has it all.

Believe it or not, Chris has some tough choices to make. He can make the move to Currumbin to enjoy the ultimate beach life, rent out the property and earn an estimated $171,600 per year, or sell it and become an instant millionaire.

However, as the news sank in, his first decision was to focus back on finishing off his last remaining jobs for the day before doing a quick drive-by of his new beach house.

And the good news kept coming. Because he bought an $80 ticket book, he'll also take home a bonus $80,000 in gold.

Congratulations, Chris – we wish you all the very best for the future.

Many thanks to you and all who support RSL Art Union. Every ticket sold helps veterans in Queensland and throughout Australia.

A FREAKISH REUNION

SEEKING INFORMATION ON WOMAN FROM NUI DAT

Can any reader recognise the WRAAC/nurse in this photo taken at Nui Dat on December 28, 1969?

In 1969, the usual rotation of battalion units on operations was one month operations, two weeks back in Nui Dat. Our unit departed Nui Dat for operations in mid-October 1969 and found ourselves on continuous follow-up operations up until, and including, the Christmas period.

On December 28, 1969, we were extracted from the Nui May Tao and returned to Nui Dat. On landing at Nui Dat heli-pad and exiting from the helicopter, I was surprised to see a uniformed woman standing by herself on the outskirts. I approached her and asked if I could take a photo. She asked why. I replied she was the first woman I had seen in half months. She consented to the photo being taken.

Perhaps a reader of the Queensland RSL News would know the woman. If so, I would be overjoyed to learn of her whereabouts. I have photos taken from the original slide I would be happy to show on to her or her family. Please contact CW Woodard.

In early 2016, while viewing some old slides I had taken in Viet Nam during 1969, I came across a slide I'd forgotten about. Being curious, I submitted the image and an article to Queensland RSL News. It was published in Ed 4 2016.

Much to my surprise, I received a card from Fremantle, Western Australia, some weeks later:

"Dear Tasi, thank you so much for going to so much trouble in locating 'the girl in the photograph.' My family and everyone I show the newspaper article to are quite amazed (taken some 47 years previously). Carolyn Evcott from Surfers Paradise, with whom I served in Viet Nam 1969/1970, sent me the newspaper cutting stating, 'Is this you?' It certainly was. I will locate a recent photo and send it to you."

Regards, Rosemary Griggs (Ex-Red Cross 1969/1970 Viet Nam)

I was wrong. Rosemary was neither a WRAAC nor nurse, but served with the Australian Red Cross. Rosemary stated she was stationed in Vung Tau, however when seating was available in a helicopter flying Vung Tau to Nui Dat, they could fly in/out to visit the wounded in the field hospital situated in Nui Dat. The more seriously wounded would be hospitalised in Vung Tau or repatriated to Australia if need be.

I produced photos of Rosemary from the slide and sent them to Fremantle for her and her family. I received a Christmas card from Rosemary with a photo of her marriage to Charlie, a retired ex-farmer. Rosemary does voluntary work for Save the Children Australia. Thank you for your past service, Rosemary.
